Since 1997, New Labour has continued the Tories' drive to privatise our public services. Outsourcing, Private Finance Initiative (PFI), and other forms of private sector involvement are threatened in the justice system, education, health, the Royal Mail, rail and tube, the provision of youth services, council housing, fire safety, public service broadcasting, as well as the MoD, Dept of Health, Jobcentre Plus and other parts of the civil service.

Up to £100 billion has so far been committed to the PFI, a scheme devised in the early 1990s to transfer large portions of the public sector to private profiteers. Rather than increasing investment in our public services, PFI is wasting billions of public funds boosting the profits of private contractors who are downgrading services and slashing pay and conditions for public sector workers.

The increased trend towards privatisation puts at risk the accountable and effective delivery of public services.

Those whose jobs have been privatised have found that their terms and conditions have suffered and their jobs are put at risk as greedy privateers put profit before quality of service.

On Tuesday 27 June public sector workers from all of these areas are joining together in solidarity to call on the government to halt its privatisation agenda.

The rally commences at 12noon at Westminster Central Hall and union members are encouraged to contact their MP in advance.
